Firefox Privacy Notice

Effective October 31, 2019

At Mozilla, we believe that privacy is fundamental to a healthy internet.

That's why we build Firefox, and all our products, to give you greater control over the information you share online and the information you share with us. We strive to collect only what we need to improve Firefox for everyone.

In this Privacy Notice, we explain what data Firefox shares and point you to settings to share even less. We also adhere to the practices outlined in the Mozilla privacy policy for how we receive, handle and share information we collect from Firefox.

Firefox by default shares data to:

Improve performance and stability for users everywhere

Set a default search provider

Suggest relevant content

Improve security for users everywhere

Crash reports

Measure and support our marketing

If you use these features, Firefox will share data to provide you functionality and help us improve our products and services:

This privacy notice is for the most recent general release version of Firefox distributed by Mozilla. If you obtain Firefox elsewhere, or are running an older version, your copy of Firefox may contain different privacy characteristics.

Mozilla's pre-release versions of Firefox (which are distributed through channels such as Nightly, Beta, Developer Edition and TestFlight) are development platforms frequently updated with experimental features and studies. In addition to the data collection described in this Privacy Notice, these versions by default may send certain types of web activity and crash data to Mozilla and in some cases to our partners. Any data collection or sharing adheres to our Firefox data collection policy and we will always be transparent and provide you with controls.
